Astronomers have discovered a black hole with just three times the mass of the sun, making it one of the smallest found to date — and it happens to be the closest known black hole, at just 1,500 light-years from Earth. The discovery "implies that there are many more small black holes that we might find if we increased the volume of space that we searched," says Tharindu Jayasinghe, an astronomer at Ohio State University and lead author of a new paper detailing the discovery in the Monthly Notices of the Royal Astronomical Society. The finding "should create a push to find these systems." Jayasinghe and his colleagues have dubbed the object the "unicorn," in part because it is unique, and in part because it was found in the constellation Monoceros, named by ancient astronomers after the Greek word for unicorn.

- ① The smallest black hole in space is smaller in mass than the sun
- ② The new black hole has revealed many new stellar systems in space.
- ③ The astronomers considered uniqueness and the location of the black hole for its name.
- (4) Astronomers have already found many more small black holes in constellations farther from Earth,

Although the cohort of adults over the age of 55 is growing steadily, they are a group that has been consistently underrepresented on television. Analyses of 1990 prime-time television programs reveal that there have been few improvements in images of the older adult population. Even though about 12.5% of the U.S. population is over the age of 64, only 2.8% of 1,228 characters were over 64. And, contrary to census figures, older men outnumber older women on television. The authors conclude that there have been no real changes in representation of the older adult population since studies of the 1970s. When older characters are presented on television, they are more likely to be comic and treated disrespectfully and rarely are seen in a romantic context.

- ① Difference in perception of the elderly between the real and the media
- ② Changes in representation of the elderly on television
- (3) Increased number of older characters on television
- 4 Necessity of diversifying television programs

However, sometimes investors can earn higher rates of return on lower-risk investments.

In the financial investing world, there is an ongoing discussion about something called alpha profits. When investors generate alpha profits, that means they deliver higher returns on their investments than what the market rate of return would normally be, given the riskiness of those investments. (1) Typically, in order to earn higher rates of return, an investor needs to take on higher levels of risk. (2) In these cases, it must be the personal skill of the investors that accounts for the extra return. (3) We all know of investors and fund managers who generate above-market returns year over year for many years running, so their performance is not just luck. (4) Those people have investing and trading strategies that generate alpha profits of 2 to 4 percent above the market rate and sometimes more.

A prosecutor is a legal representative of the government responsible for investigating crimes and bringing charges against suspects in the criminal court of justice. A prosecutor has an obligation to remain objective and to collect and examine evidence even when it is favorable to the suspect. Prosecutors are _____ when they make decisions such as whether to file a prosecution or place someone under arrest. This means that the individual prosecutors have sole responsibility for their own decisions and that these cannot be changed by, for example, the chief public prosecutor to whom they report. Anyone directly affected by a prosecutor's decision does, however, have the right to request that the decision be reviewed by a prosecutor at a higher judicial level.

When I first went for a drive in the new car I bought, I was quite surprised to find what a splendid vehicle it was. "So this is one of those luxury cars I've heard so much about," I thought to myself as we drove down the highway, and suddenly I felt quite content. However, I soon began to feel very fearful lest we should have some accident. I had ridden in other people's cars and in hired vehicles a number of times. and never once had I been the least concerned about having an accident. Now that the car was my own, I felt a sense of anxiety that I have never felt before. I thought that using a taxi would be more relaxing than riding in my own car. This is an example of the worries that accompany the luxury of material wealth. Not all God's gifts are sweetness and light; everything that has a good side has an equally significant bad side.
